Sisters-in-Law

An Uncensored Guide for Women Practicing Law in the Real World

By Lisa Sherman, Deborah Turchiano and Jill Schechter
Sourcebooks, $16.95

Wish you were Ally McBeal? A lot of women graduating law school these days were no doubt influenced by TV's glamorous thin Lizzie. (About 50 percent of law school students are women.)

"Sisters-in-Law" is written by three female litigators, and it covers everything from choosing legal specialties, how to rise within the firm, how and when to work weekends — and how to pursue flings with fellow attorneys.

The book seems representative mostly of large urban law offices, but it is smartly and crisply written. Any attorney will find the book entertaining.
